

Triton SJA200 Superjaws

Matt Long puts Triton's SJA200 Superjaws to the test

Triton were part of the Global Machine Company, and now this company has been bought up by Toolstream, a UK company. Triton are now putting their famed Superjaws back out there.

This re-iteration of the machine is the SJA200. For me, the jaws just have that usability factor and I'm pleased to be able to report that the vice is very simple to use.

Once the legs and foot lever are placed in the correct position, it is simply a case of locking the workpiece into place and using the Superjaws for your intended purpose. The controls are intuitive. The locking and unlocking switch on the front works as expected, and the action on the foot lever is sure and positive. You simply push the moveable jaw against the workpiece then press down with the foot lever. If you've remembered to put the switch in the lock position, then your timber is gripped hard instantly. To release, put the switch in the unlock position, and then push down again. The jaws can also be removed, turned around and replaced to give a massive clamping reach.

Verdict

This is a great bit of kit and is suitable for a number of different purposes, especially those concerned with turning and carving. Its uses are extensive and is well worth looking into if you haven't already.
